

Kenton Shepard

Kenton Shepard worked as a tradesman and contractor in residential and light commercial building for 30 years before founding the Peak to Prairie Inspection Service in 2001. In 2003, BuilderBooks, publisher for the National Association of Home Builders, published Jobsite Phrasebook, the first of his three English/Spanish phrase books for the building trades they would eventually publish.

Kenton lives in Denver, CO and specializes in developing methods for inspecting homes built using alternative building methods such as log, straw bale and rammed earth.

He is about to complete a green building course designed to qualify home inspectors to provide neutral third party verification of green features in homes. The course will be available free to the public on the website of the International Association of Certified Home Inspectors (InterNACHI).

He'll be talking about these specialized inspections and green feature verification on December 13th at the Boulder CO Inspectors' Conference.
